Tenants have only weeks to leave their home after developers submitted plans to build a data centre twice the size of Wembley football pitch on greenbelt land.

Three men, two of whom are disabled, have been told they have until March to up find a new home with their current residence, Manor Farm.

Their eviction notice comes after plans were submitted by Manor Farm Propco LTD to have buildings on the site demolished to make way new development plans.

The data centre - which will be three storeys high - and a battery energy storage system on green belt land in Slough.

Plans lodged show the northern part of the site will cover the Manor Park industrial estate - including the farmhouse - while the southern area is the greenbelt.

Although developers do acknowledge the green belt on Poyle Road- which is located nearby Heathrow and other industrial buildings, they suggest its of 'poor quality'.

They also argued the development's economic advantages create 'very special circumstances' that exceed the harm.

The plan reads: 'The poor-quality nature of the Green Belt on site and the surrounding area has been recognised in multiple appeal decisions'.

Following the plans submission, private tenants fear they may be homeless as they now face the possible instability of b&b life as they have been served with eviction notices.

Peter Bully, 65, described the ordeal as 'distressing', telling MailOnline: 'It's terrible. I have lived here for 30 years since day dot. I thought I was going to leave here in a

'I am p****d off because I am quite happy here. I am just annoyed at the way it's being done.'

He added: 'I have been told I might have to go into a b&b, which means you have go in at 5pm and then they kick you out at 7am - so what do you do for the rest of the day?'

His neighbour, Alan Grainger, 66, who depends on crutches to walk, expressed concerns about a lack of possible beds at short-stay accommodation.

'I have tried to ring people up and left my phone number to see what's going on but no one seems to know anything,' he said.

'We also have furniture. I don't want to leave it her in case it gets destroyed because if they come to chuck us out they might throw it outside.'

The two confirmed to MailOnline that Slough Borough Council have reached out to begin the process of finding them alternative accommodation.

A man, who chose to go by the name of Graham Stewart, said in reference to the recently submitted plans: 'You can't make an omelette without breaking eggs.'

Referencing the plans, he said: 'I do think it will good for the area in general - not for people like us - but for the area in general yes.'

They also argued the development's economic advantages create 'very special circumstances' that exceed the harm

'I am worried about parking more than anything else.'

Another local has slammed the plans to build the data centre, arguing the area doesn't have the infrastructure and that construction would be detrimental to wildlife.

The 50-year-old woman told MailOnline: 'I'm heartbroken. We already have to deal with the traffic out the front here and the planes

'This was originally a tiny lane originally designed for horse and cart and maybe can cope with a couple cars.

'The infrastructure cannot cope with any more buildings on this road period,' she added.

'We don't want any building work, because we actually feel that we are trapped in this village unless we leave before 4pm.'

'It never used to be as built up as this but my saving grace is, I can sit outside, and I have deer coming in and now I'm really concerned about the wildlife.

'The wildlife is so essential, because if we don't have them then, what do we have left? '

She also feared possible flooding chaos if the green belt was impacted in anyway.

'We're getting monstrosities. We are sick and tired of Slough Borough Council not keeping their commitments to us as residents,' she said.

'Now we will have even less residents on this roads to oppose building work.'

The planning application sent to Slough Borough Council outline plans to create 'buffer zones' between the data centre, nature reserve and sustainable drainage systems.

A spokesperson for Slough Borough Council said: 'This application shall be considered by Planning Officers and presented to Members of the Planning Committee when deciding on the proposal.

'At present, the site falls within the Green Belt therefore shall be considered against both National Planning policy criteria as well as our own Saved Local Plan policies.

'We encourage residents to make their views known to us by providing comments directly on this and any planning application, whether they support or object to proposals and hope this resident has commented on the planning application off Poyle Road.'

MailOnline has approached Manor Farm Propco Limited for comment.
